

Communication & Group Discussion Notes

PlacementPrep Study Notes

1. Group Discussion Etiquette

Evaluators watch how you engage, not just what you say.

- Make a strong opening or closing statement if possible — both are memorable.
- Build on others' points respectfully instead of only pushing your own view.
- Avoid interrupting or talking over others — it is viewed very negatively.

2. Active Listening

Listening well is as important as speaking well.

- Paraphrase what the other person said before responding, to confirm understanding.
- Maintain eye contact and avoid distractions like checking your phone.
- Don't just plan your reply while others are speaking — actually listen first.

3. Body Language & Non-Verbal Cues

Non-verbal signals should reinforce your spoken message.

- Sit upright, maintain natural eye contact, and avoid crossed arms.
- A firm handshake and a smile create a strong first impression.

4. Professional Email Writing

Recruiters judge professionalism from your very first email.

- Use a clear, specific subject line.
- Start with a proper greeting (e.g., 'Dear Ms. Sharma,' or 'To the Recruitment Team,').
- Keep the email concise, proofread before sending, and sign off with your full name.

5. Explaining Technical Topics Simply

A key skill for both interviews and workplace communication.

- Use analogies to relate technical concepts to everyday ideas.
- Avoid unnecessary jargon when speaking to a non-technical audience.

Practice Tip

- Record yourself answering a common question and review your filler words ('um', 'like').
- Practice a 2-minute self-introduction until it feels natural, not memorized.
